The Position Of Qiyâs (Analogy) In The Sharia Economic Law And Its Application
In The Contemporary Business Transactions

Abstract

The agreed sources of law in Islamic law are the Holy Koran and the Sunnah. However, in the literature on ushul fiqh, Islamic jurists have different opinions regarding the position of analogy (qiyâs) as a source and legal proposition that functions as a method of finding law in Islam. Then there are differences of opinion regarding the use of analogy in the context of sharia economic law. This research focuses on the position of analogy (qiyâs) as a method of discovering sharia economic law and its application in the contemporary transactions. This study uses a qualitative method with a normative juridical approach. This research includes the type of literature study research. The results of the study show that analogy (qiyâs) can be used as a method of legal discovery, especially in sharia economic law and its application in contemporary transactions including qiyâs of IMFZ contracts to bai’ al-salam contracts; (2) qiyâs sale and lease back transactions to bai’ al-istighlâl; (3) qiyâs wakâlah bi al-ujrah contract to ijârah contract; (4) qiyâs Wada’i al-Mashrafiyyah to qardh contracts; and (5) qiyâs deposits to mudhârib-yudhârib.
I. Introduction

The ushul fiqh experts have agreed that the Holy Koran and hadith occupy the position as the primary source of law so that both of them become the basis for law enforcement. (Akhmad Husaini, 2022) However, the Holy Koran and hadith as sources of Islamic law are still global and general in nature, thus requiring further interpretation to detail the legal arguments of both, so that the law can be explored especially in terms of responding to contemporary issues. (Arifana Nur Kholiq, 2014)

Ijtihad has a fairly central position in the discipline of ushul fiqh which focuses on the methodology of extracting and applying Islamic law. One of the methodological instruments within the scope of the discussion of ijtihad is the analogy or popular method with the term of qiyyās. The law discovery method based on qiyyās in the study of ushul fiqh science is a theory that is quite productive to be used by ushul experts. (Ali Muhtarom, 2015)

In simple terms, qiyyās is equating a law that does not have a text (nash) with a law that does have a text (nash) because of the similarity of 'illat law (ratio legis). In another sense, qiyyās is the result of thinking in “deductive analogy”. (Bay, 2012)

The qiyyās method is popularly used as a law discovery method in the Shafi’i school of thought. In the Shafi’i school of thought, this qiyyās hierarchy occupies the fourth position after the Holy Koran, sunnah and ijmak (consensus). Even Imam Shafi’i as the pioneer of this school of thought stated that ijtihad is qiyyās. (Ahmad Masyhadi, 2020)

Legal issues in Islam are not only related to the discussion of (formal) worship or commonly referred to as mahdhah worship, but also related to muamalah matters or referred to as sharia economic law. Thus, the rules in Islam are comprehensive and universal covering various aspects of life both at the level of worship rituals and social interactions. (Hidayatullah, 2020)

This qiyyās method is used by the jumhur of ushul fiqh scholars in making discoveries and determining laws (istinbâth) in the development of Islamic legal thought in order to respond to and solve the current legal events. (Maimun, 2022) Thus, Islamic law is more flexible and in accordance with the demands of the times. According to the scholars, the study in discussing the realm of worship is tauqifi, meaning that worship is static/rigid until there is an injunction. In contrast to studies in muamalah which are elastic and dynamic so that the opportunities and potentials of ijtihad are wide open. Related to the contemporary issues in the field of muamalah transactions, it is very possible for the presence of the role of qiyyās in the method of discovery and determination of law. Therefore, this paper aims to determine the position of qiyyās in the sharia economic law (muamalah mâliyyah) and its application in the contemporary transactions.

2. Research Method

The approach used in this study is a normative juridical approach. The normative juridical approach is carried out through a philosophical, systematic and critical analysis approach. Because this research is based on a normative juridical approach, the technical data collection in this research is through literature study, namely examining and reviewing primary and secondary legal materials. The primary sources in this study are ushul fikh books, especially those related to the discussion of analogy or qiyâs issues. The secondary sources in this study are literature that has relevance to the research focus. This research is descriptive research because this research was conducted to find as accurate and complete data as possible about the characteristics of a situation or phenomena that can help strengthen old theories related to legal discovery through analogies to build new theories and their applications in the field of sharia economic law.
3. Results and Discussion

The Position of Qiyās as a Method of Discovering Sharia Economic Law

Etymologically, the word qiyās has the meaning of al-taqdīr and al-taswiyyah (guessing and equating). The etymological definition of qiyās which is closer to the definition of qiyās in terms is to equate the branch to the principal (taswiyyah al-far‘ ila al-ashl). While the terminological definition of qiyās as presented by al-Baidhawi is as follows:

("Applying legal equivalents to cases whose law is explained in the texts (nash), to cases where the law is not explained, because according to the view of a mujtahid, there is an illat (ratio legis) legal equation").

In applying the concept of qiyās required devices that must be fulfilled. Without these elements, the qiyās methodology cannot work in establishing law. Therefore, before ijtihad in legal istinbâth, the pillars of qiyās must first be found. There are 4 (four) pillars or elements of qiyās, namely: (1) principal/origin; (2) branches; (3) original/principal law, and (4) ‘illat. The brief description of the four pillars/elements in qiyās is as follows:

1) Ashl (principal/origin), namely something that is legalized in the text (nash) which is a measure or place of likening or qiyās. In terms of the science of ushul fiqh, it is called ashl or maqīs ‘alaih or musyabbah bih.
2) Furu’ (branch) is something that is not legalized in a similar or qiyās legal text (nash). In terms of the science of ushul fiqh it is called al-far‘u or al-maqīs or al-musyabbah.
3) Ashl law, namely syara’law which is texted (nash) on the principal which will then become law for the branch.
4) ‘illat, namely the cause that connects the main with its branches or a trait that is in ashl and the trait that is sought in furu’.

The discussion regarding of the position of qiyās as a legal argument in Islamic economic activities, there are at least 2 views of scholars regarding this matter, the first group states that qiyās is a legal argument in Islamic economic activities. This first group states that the jurists have agreed that qiyās is one of the main points or bases for establishing law in the field of sharia economics. The view of this first group generates to the attitude and shared by the majority of scholars that qiyās is a legal proposition and therefore becomes hujjah syar‘iyyah (the basis of argumentation in establishing law).

4 (Mufid, 2016) 63.
The legal basis that is used as a guideline by this first view is the Holy Koran sura al-Nisa (4): 59 and the hadith narrated by Abu Dawud regarding ijtihad carried out by Mu’adz Ibn Jabal’s companion. On the basis of this hadith, according to the majority of scholars, the Prophet Muhammad has shown how to find out and establish laws, one of which is in the field of sharia economic law which includes ijtihad with ra’yu if it is not found in the Nash (The Holy Koran and hadith). While qiyâs is part of ijtihad with ra’yu. Therefore, the determination of sharia economic law is carried out using the qiyâs method.

The next argument put forward by the first group is based on the practice of companions. The companions have agreed to use qiyâs as the basis for determining the law. The election of Abu Bakr as the Caliph (leader) was based on qiyâs which was based on the consideration that Abu Bakr was always the imam in prayer when the Prophet was not around.

The last argument put forward by this first group is that the texts (nash) of the Holy Koran and hadith are limited. Meanwhile, contemporary issues in the field of sharia economic law, such as contemporary transactions, will continue to emerge from time to time. To be able to answer these contemporary issues in the field of sharia economic law, there is no other way except by examining the ‘illat laws that exist in the texts (nash) and it is on the basis of ‘illat that the law is applied to these new issues. With limited Nash, while new issues especially those related to contemporary transactions, continue to emerge, ijtihad using qiyâs is a must.

Based on the four basic arguments above, the scholars among the majority of scholars stated that qiyâs is the proposition in establishing syara’ law, especially in the field of sharia economic law, because it has the power of proof (hujjah) in establishing syara’ law.

The second group is a group that rejects the existence of qiyâs as a proposition and hujjah of sharia’ (the basis for establishing law). This group consists of al-Nazm and his followers from among the Mu’tazilah, Dawud Zahiri, Ibn Hazm and some of the Shiites.5 Ibn Hazm, one of the figures from the Zhahiriyyah school of thought stated that refusing to argue with ra’yu and only argue with the Holy Koran and sunnah by paying attention to the outward meaning (zahir) only. According to him, because qiyâs is a part of ra’yu, this cannot be accepted as a hujjah and proposition in determining the law.6

There are several arguments presented by this second group in terms of rejecting qiyâs as a legal proposition. There are at least 3 (three) arguments, first, based on Q.S al-Baqarah: 29 and Q.S al-Maidah: 3. According to this second group, these two verses show that Islam is perfect and does not need qiyâs because the texts (nash) come to explain everything clearly, whether related to matters that are obligatory, unlawful, makruh, sunnah or permissible. Second, the basis for determining the law based on qiyâs is zhanni in determining the law's ‘illat. Therefore, qiyās cannot bring it to the level of belief; and third, the final argument for this group is holding on to companions like Abu Bakr and Ibn Mas'ud who denied qiyās and warned them to be careful with ra'y (logic).

According to the author’s view, the first opinion is a relevant opinion and a superior opinion. This is based on consideration of legal arguments as stated by the first group and at the level of implementation, qiyās is needed so much in contemporary transaction issues. Thus, qiyās has a position as a legal proposition in the determination of law in the field of sharia economic law.

The Application of Qiyās in The Contemporary Business Transactions

Qiyās IMFZ to Bai’ al-Salam

One of the contemporary contracts introduced by the scholars as contracts in contemporary financial transactions is ījārah maushūfah fī al-dzimmah. The ījārah maushūfah fī al-dzimmah (IMFZ) contract is also known as the ījārah forward or forward lease or salam fī al-manāfi' (salam for the benefit). In the sale and purchase of salam contract, there is bai’ al-ain (sale and purchase of objects), while in the ījārah maushūfah fī al-dzimmah (IMFZ) contract, there is bai’ al-manfa’ah (sale and purchase of benefits). The price is paid in advance, while the benefits of the goods are forward. As is the case in buying and selling salam, the price (money) is paid in advance, while the benefits of the goods are deferred and become the debt (dzimmah) of the seller.7

According to Ahmad Muhamad Mahmud Nashir, the ījārah maushūfah fī al-dzimmah contract is defined as follows:

“Buy and sell future benefits at a price that comes first” 8.

Ahmad Muhamad Mahmud Nashar, in his book Fiqh al-Ijrārah maushūfah fī al-Dzimmah explains the iktilāf (differences of opinion) among fiqh scholars regarding the legal status of the ījārah maushūfah fī al-dzimmah contract. The description is as follows:

“Fikh experts are of the opinion regarding the legal status of the ījārah maushūfah fī al-dzimmah contract; first, the Hanafiyyah scholars are of the opinion that the ījārah contract for goods which are included in maushūf fī al-dzimmah (which are classified as dependents) is a prohibited contract. Hanafiyyah scholars argue that rented goods must be tangible at the time the contract is made. Second, the majority/jumhur of scholars from the Malikiyah, Syafi’iyah and Hanabilah circles are of the opinion that it is permissible to enter into an ijārah contract on goods that are maushūf fī al-dzimmah (which are classified as dependents) because the majority view that it is the same as a salam contract in terms of benefits.⁹

Based on the information provided by Ahmad Muhammad Mahmud Nashar above, the opinion of the majority of scholars regarding the permissibility of the ijārah maushūfah fī al-dzimmah contract is based on analogy (qiyaṣ), namely analogizing the IMFZ contract to the bai’ al-salam contract. The IMFZ contract is analogous to the bai’ al-salam contract. When viewed from the pillars of qiyaṣ, then (1) the ashl is the bai’ al-salam contract; (2) the furu’ is the ijārah maushūfah fī al-dzimmah (IMFZ) contract; the ashl law is permissible; and (4) the illat includes bai’ maushuf fī al-dzimmah, namely buying and selling which is characterized by responsibility. Because an ijārah contract is the same as a sale-purchase contract, the difference is that the object in the sale-purchase contract is ‘ain (object) and benefits while in the ijārah contract the object is benefits. Either the benefits of an item or service.

With regard to the permissibility of the bai’ al-salam contract, this is based on information in the Holy Koran, the hadith of the Prophet SAW, and ijmaid.

Regarding the above verse as a legal or juridical basis for buying and selling salam, Ibn ‘Abbas said:

"I testify that the salaf (salam) is part of the debt with a time that is permissible and lawful by Allah."¹⁰

The argumentation side of verse 282 of surah al-Baqarah shows that it is permissible for debt transactions and salam buying and selling agreements to be part of a debt transaction. Al-Qurthubi explains in his interpretation as follows:

"The nature of debts is an expression of every muamalah which states there are two i’wadh (compensation), that one is done in cash and the other is in the responsibility. According to the Arabs, ‘ain (object) is if it is tangible and dain (debt) if it is not."¹¹

The provisions regarding the permissibility of buying and selling salam in the hadith of the Prophet SAW based on the history of Ibn ‘Abbas are as follows:

*9 (Ahmad Muhammad Mahmud Nashar, 2009)*7.

*10 (Katsir, 2003)*412.

*11 (Syam al-Din al-Qurthubi, 1964)*337.
from Ibn 'Abbas radiallyahu 'anhum a said: When the Prophet sallallaahu 'alaihi wasallam arrived in Medina, they (residents of Medina) practiced buying and selling fruits with the salaf system, namely paying in advance and receiving the goods after a period of two or three years later, then He said: "Whoever practices the salaf in buying and selling fruits should do it with a known measure and a known scale, and until a known time" (Al-Bukhari, 2008)(H.R Bukhari).

As for the basis of the ijmaid of the Ulama on the permissibility of buying and selling salam contracts, it can be seen as said by Ibn Mundzir as follows:

"Ulama have agreed that the contract of buying and selling salam is permissible" 12

Thus, it can be concluded that the permissibility of the ijrârah maushufah fi al-dzimmah (IMFZ) contract is based on the analogy (qiyas) to the bai' al-salam contract. The National Sharia Board-Indonesian Council of Ulama (DSN) has issued a fatwa related to the al-ijrârah maushufah fi al-dzimmah contract, namely the DSN-MUI Fatwa NO: 10I/DSN-MUIIX/2016 concerning the al-Ijarah al-Maushuah Fi al -Dzimmah contract.

In the general provisions of the fatwa it is explained that: (1) what is meant by ijarah is a contract of transfer of usufructuary rights (benefits) of goods and/or services within a certain time with payment of rent (ujrah); (2) The Al-Ijarah al-Maushufah fi al-Dzimmah contract is a leasing contract for the benefit of an item (benefit of 'ain) and/or service ('amal) which at the time of the contract only states its characteristics and specifications (quantity and quality).

In the legal provisions of the fatwa it is explained that: (1) the al-Ijarah al-Maushufah fi al-Dzimmah contract may be made by following the provisions in this fatwa; and (2) the al-Ijarah al-Maushufah fi al-Dzimmah contract applies effectively and creates legal consequences, both in the form of specific legal consequences (the purpose of the contract) and general legal consequences, namely the emergence of rights and obligations, since the contract was executed.

Qiyâs Sale and Lease Back transaction to Bai al-Istighlâl

The concept of sale and lease back (al-bai’ ma’a al-isti’jâr) is a term used in business law. Sale and Lease Back is a type of financing in which goods actually come from the lessee, then purchased by the lessor. Then, the goods that are already in the hands of the lessor are leased back to the lessee based on a certain agreed period of time.

The discussion regarding the concept of Sale and Lease Back is indirectly related to the concept of buying and selling wafa (bai’ al-wafâ). As for the definition of bai’ al-wafa in terminology as stated in the book Majallat al-Ahkâm al-'Adliyyah Article

118, namely:

(المادة 118) يبيع الوفاء، هو البيع بشرط أن الباحث من يرد التمن يبيع المُشتري إليه المبيع

“Buying and selling on condition that the seller can buy back the goods he has sold to the buyer at a mutually agreed time”. 13

The concept of sale and lease back is one of variant of the leasing concepts. In muamalah fiqh studies, the concept of leasing is usually closely related to the concept of Ijârah Muntakiyyah bi al-Tamlȋk (IMBT). Meanwhile, the concept of sale and lease of back in contemporary muamalah fiqh studies is commonly referred to as al-bai’ wa al-isti’jâr.

The substance of bai’ wa al-istighlâl is similar to bai’ al-istighlâl which is contained in the book Majallah al-Ahkâm al-‘Adliyyah (Islamic Civil Law) Article 119 of the Turkish Qanun 1876 H. In Article 119, bai al-istighlâl is defined as following:

(المادة 119) يبيع الاستغلال هو يبيع وفاء على أن يستأجر عليه المبائع

“Bai’ al-istighlâl is buying and selling wafâ in which the buyer leases back the goods he bought to the seller”. 14

The buying and selling of istighâl in principle is the relationship between the concept of buying and selling wafâ and the concept of ijârah (leasing), namely the use of objects for buying and selling by way of renting or leasing. In other words, the goods that have been sold to the buyer are leased back by the buyer to the seller.

In the perspective of the Hanafi school of thought, the bai’ al-istighlâl contract is a valid and permissible contract.15 Meanwhile, according to Rafiq Yunus al-Mishri, the bai’ al-istighlâl contract is a forbidden contract. Rafiq Yunus al-Mishri stated that:

بيع الاستغلال: مثل بيع الوفاء، ولكن المُفترض يشتري اللمبيع من المَبِيع، فهو يبيع صُدُورِهِ الغاية منه، أكلُ الرُبا من طريق الأجَرة.

“Buying and selling istighlâl is similar to bai’ al-wafâ, but (the difference) is that the muqtarirdh (debtor in a qardh/debt contract (the seller in the first buying and selling contract) rents the goods he sells from the muqridh (creditor in the qardh contract) the buyer in the first buying and selling contract); then the buying and selling of istighlâl includes a shȗry (artificial) buying and selling contract because the purpose of the buyer (in the first buying and selling contract) is to seek profit (usury transaction) by way of leasing”16

Sale and lease back transactions are allowed because they are analogous to bai’

al-istighlâl. Thus, when viewed from the pillars of qiyas, then (1) the ashl is bai' al-istighlâl; (2) the furu’ is a sale and lease back transaction; (3) the ashl law is permissible, based on the views of the Hanafiyyah and Syafi’iyah scholars; and (4) the illat is an asset bai’ (buying and selling) contract in which the buyer then leases back the assets he has purchased to the seller.

The National Sharia Board-Indonesian Council of Ulama (DSN-MUI) has issued a fatwa regarding Sale and Lease Back, namely Fatwa No. 71/DSN-MUI/VI/2008 concerning Sale and Lease Back. Fatwa NO: 71/DSN-MUI/VI/2008 concerning Sale and Lease Back (al-Bai ma’a al-Istijar). In general provisions it is explained that Sale and Lease Back is the buying and selling of an asset in which the buyer then leases the asset to the seller; and Sale and Lease Back is legally permissible.

The specific provisions explain the following: (1) The contracts used are Bai’ and Ijarah which are carried out separately. (2) In the Bai’ contract, the buyer may promise to the seller to resell the assets he bought in accordance agreement; (3) An Ijarah contract can only be made after a buying and selling of assets that will be used as an Ijarah object; (4) Ijarah objects are goods that have benefits and economic value; (5) The pillars and terms of Ijarah in this Sale and Lease Back fatwa must take into account the substance of the related provisions in the DSN-MUI fatwa Number: 09/DSN-MUI/IV/2000 concerning Ijarah Financing; (6) The rights and obligations of each party must be explained in the contract; (7) The costs incurred in maintaining the Sale and Lease Back Objects are regulated in the contract.

Qiyâs Wakalah bi al-Ujrah contract to Ijârah contract

Basically, the wakâlah contract is the domain of tabarru’ contracts. It means that in principle this contract is formed not to seek profit. This is the opinion of the majority of fiqh scholars as informed by Thalal Sulaiman Ibrahim al-Dausui as follows:

الاصل في الوكالة من حيث الجملة انها تبرع بدون اجر وهذا ظاهر في كلام الفقهاء

“Basically the wakâlah contract in general is the domain of the tabarru contract, so there is no ujrah (wages/fees) and this is the opinion of the fiqh experts”

However, in contemporary transaction practices, wakâlah contracts are introduced and applied which are accompanied by a fee or ujrah (wakâlah bi al-ujrah). Scholars who allow ujrah in wakâlah contracts include Ibn Juzai, a scholar from the Malikiyyah school of thought in the book Qawanin al-Fiqhiyyah, argues as follows:

تجوز الوكاة بأجورة ونفي الأجرة فإن كانت بأجورة فحكمها حكم الإيجارات

“A wakâlah contract is permitted to be accompanied by ujrah (wages/fees) or without ujrah. If the wakâlah contract is accompanied by ujrah, then the law of it follows the law of ijârah contract”.

Apart from Ibn Juzai, among the Shafi’iyah scholars, namely al-Raf’i allowed the wakâlah bi al-ujrah contract, as his statement is as follows:

ان الجوائز من أحكام الوكالة بير بعدها الحليلة عن الجعل أسا إذا شرط فيها جهلا معلوما وجمع شرائط

الاجارة وعقد العقد بصيغة الاجارة فهو لازم وإن عقد بصيغة الوكالة فيمكن تجريبه على أن الاعتبار بصيغ العقود أو

“In fact, the permissibility of the wakalah contract law is that basically the wakalah contract does not have wages. If there is a requirement for wages that are known (specifications) and the conditions for an ijârah contract are gathered, then the contract uses the provision (shîghat) of the ijârah contract, then the wakâh contract is conventional in nature (binding/cannot be canceled unilaterally), if using the provision wakâlah contract, then what is used as a guidance is the provision contract or the substance of the contract.”

Apart from the Maliki and Shafi‘i schools of thought, in the Hanbali school of thought it is permissible to practice a wakâlah contract accompanied by a fee. This is the statement of Ibn Qudamah as follows:

وَيَجْزَىُ رَبُّكُم مِّن ذَٰلِكَ نُفَسًا، وَيَجْزِيُ الزَّكَاة مَنْ أَعْطَاهَا، وَيَضُرِّعُ لِلْيَدِينِ مَنْ أَنْزَلَ عَلَىٰهُم مِّن رَّحْمَتِنَا؛

“It is permissible for a wakâlah contract with a fee or without a fee... this is based on (the description of the hadith) that the Prophet sent a zakat officer and gave him a wage for the zakat official”

The permissibility of a wakâlah bi al-ujrah contract is an analogy (qiyaṣ) to ijârah so that the legal consequences follow the ijârah contract. This is as stated in the Ma‘ayir Syar‘iyyah as follows:

اذا كانت الوكالة باجرة تطبق عليها احكام الاجارة

“If the wakâlah contract is accompanied by ujrah (wages/fees) then the law is to comply with the ijârah contract (services)”

When viewed based on the pillars of qiyaṣ, then (1) the ashl is an ijârah contract; (2) the furu’ is the wakâlah bi al-ujrah contract; (3) the ashl law is permissible as stated by the scholars above; and (4) the illat are both renting out services accompanied by ujrah.

The law regarding the permissibility of the wakâlah bi al-ujrah contract is the ijmak (consensus) of the scholars including madzâhib al-arba‘ah (the four schools of fiqh, namely Hanafiyyah, Malikiyah, Sya‘iyyah and Hanabilah)

The National Sharia Board-Indonesian Council of Ulama (DSN-MUI) has issued a special fatwa relating to the wakâlah bi al-ujrah contract, namely Fatwa Number 113/DSN-MUI/IX/2017 concerning the Wakalah bi al-Ujrah contract. The legal provisions in the fatwa stated that the wakalah bi al-ujrah contract may be carried out subject to and complying with the provisions and limitations contained in the fatwa.

Qiyās Wa‘dā‘i al-Mashrafiyyah to the Qardh Contract

One of the products of Islamic banking is a fundraising product which in contemporary fiqh literature is called wadā‘i mashrafiyyah or hisâb al-jârî. that conventional banking products, especially fundraising products, are only based on the interest system as a form of achievement and counter-achievement for the use of funds, whereas sharia banking is based on traditional Islamic contracts whose existence is highly dependent on the real needs of customers. (Rozali, 2020)

Sharia principles in the fundraising product in the form of savings at Islamic banks are in accordance with the fatwa of The National Sharia Board-Indonesian Council of Ulama (DSN-MUI) Number 2 of 2000 concerning Wadā‘ah contract savings. (Reza Henning Wijaya, 2021)

The context of the wadā‘ah contract in the provisions of the fatwa of The National Sharia Board-Indonesian Council of Ulama (DSN-MUI) is different from the wadā‘ah contract in Islamic fiqh literature. In Islamic jurisprudence, the wadā‘ah contract is a trustworthy contract, this is different from the provisions of the fatwa and the implementation of the wadā‘ah contract in sharia bank savings products that are dhamānah (Hamid, 2019). As a legal consequence of using dhamānah in a wadā‘ah contract, apart from the bank being able to use these funds, the bank guarantees all of the funds so that the customer can take any risk at any time. (Meskahat Mahbub dan Anisul Mannan Shamo, 2016)

The wadā‘ah contract which was originally trustful in nature and included in the domain of the tabarru’ contract in Islamic banking practices as well as the DSN-MUI fatwa provisions related to the Savings fatwa changed to dhamānah which has the connotation of profit resulting in a shift between wadā‘ah contract provisions in Islamic fiqh and wadā‘ah as a sharia banking product, especially savings deposit products. (Huda, 2015)

In the mu‘āmalah māliyyah fiqh study, the discussion related to the use of goods deposited by the recipient of the deposit in a wadā‘ah contract and the existence of guarantees for risks for the recipient of the guarantee, causing the contract to be damaged/canceled according to the views of Syafi‘iyyah scholars. (Afif, 2014)

The author views that the substance of the wadā‘ah contract in the savings deposit product (wadā‘i al-mashrafiyyah) is a qardh contract. If we look at the definition of a qardh contract as conveyed by Wahbah al-Zuhaili, it is as follows:

\[\text{تمليك شيء للغير على ان يرد بدله من غير زيادة}\]

"The contract which results in the transfer of ownership of goods to another party which must be returned (by the borrower) without any additions" 22

Based on the definition of a qardh contract as conveyed by Wahbah Zuhaili above, the author views that the substance of the contract contained in the savings deposit product in an Islamic financial institution product is a qardh contract. Wahbah Zuhaili further said that:

\[\text{}\]

22 (Wahbah al-Zuhaili, 2002)79.
“Changes from a wadȋ’ah contract to a qardh contract: If the object of the wadȋ’ah contract is money or objects that are consumed by way of consumption, such as seeds, if the depositor gives permission to the person entrusted with the object of the deposit (money) then the contract is a contract qardh”

The above opinion is at least based on 2 (two) considerations: first, the intention of the Islamic financial institution to collect funds from customers in the form of savings is to carry out tasharruf (fund management) belonging to customers; while the customer intends to deposit the funds with the Islamic financial institution and collect them if needed; secondly, basically there is no dhamân (guarantee/responsibility) for a wadȋ’ah contract, unless the entrusted party does ta’adi (does an act that is beyond their authority) because the wadȋ’ah contract is a trust contract. Therefore, the existence of guarantees related to wadȋ’ah contracts contradicts the substance of the contract.

Therefore, the permissibility of wadâ’i mashrafiyyah (savings) product transactions is based on analogy (qiyas), that is, analogizing it to a qardh contract. When viewed from the pillars of qiyas, (1) the ashl is a qardh contract; (2) the furu’ is wadâ’i mashrafiyyah; (3) the ashl law is permissible; and (4) the illat is permissibility regarding the use of goods accompanied by a guarantee to be returned.

Because in substance the contract in the DSN-MUI fatwa No. 2 of 2000 is a qardh contract, so the provisions and laws related to qardh contracts apply. The position of the customer in this case is the muqridh (lender) while the Islamic bank is the muqtaridh (the party receiving the loan). The legal implications of the DSN-MUI fatwa regarding savings must follow the dhawâbith (parameters) in the qardh contract, one of which is that the muqridh may not take advantage of the al-qardh contract that he does, whether the benefits are agreed upon in the contract or have become a habit that is considered as good. Among the benefits of qradh are iwadh (rewards/compensation), both in the form of goods and services.

Qiyās Deposits to Mudharib-Yudharib

In simple terms, deposits can be interpreted as time deposits whose withdrawals can only be made at a certain time based on the depositor’s agreement with the bank. In fundraising activities at Islamic financial institutions, the contract for deposit products is a mudharabah contract. This is as stipulated in the fatwa of the National Syari’ah Council No: 03/DSN-MUI/IV/2000 Concerning Deposits.

In the general provisions of the fatwa it is explained that in this transaction the customer acts as shahibul maal or owner of funds, and the bank acts as mudhârib or fund manager. Furthermore, in the next point, there is information that in its capacity as a mudhârib, a bank can carry out various types of business that do not conflict with...

shari'ah principles and develop them, including mudharabah with other parties.

There is a provision stating that in deposit products, banks can enter into mudharabah contracts with other parties. Thus there is a multilevel mudharabah concept. The concept of multilevel mudharabah in some contemporary muamalah fiqh literature, Wahbah al-Zuhaili calls a multilevel mudharabah scheme (where the mudhârib party reinvests with a mudhârbah contract or the like of it) with the term al-mudhârib yudhârib. Rafiq Yunus al-Mishri refers to it as al-mudhârib al-wasîth, while Jaih Mubarok and Hasanudin refer to it as a repeat mudharabah. (Putra, 2020)

Legally, there is an iktilâf (difference of opinion) among the scholars regarding the law of repeating a mudharabah or mudhârib-yudhârib contract. There are scholars who forbid and there are scholars who allow the practice of this contract. Briefly, Rafiq Yunus al-Mishri explained that the fiqh scholars agreed that the mudhârib party was not allowed to repeat the mudhârabah or hand over the funds belonging to the shâhîb al-mâl to a third party with a mudhârbah contract scheme, because the shâhîb al-mâl only entrusted the funds to the mudhârib, not to the third parties.

In contrast to the opinion of Rafiq Yunus al-Mishri above, scholars from the Hanabilah community, as informed by Ibn Qudamah, allow mudhârib-yudhârib contracts, if the mudhârib (first) party obtains the permission from the shâhîb al-mâl. This can be seen in the statement of Ibn Qudamah as follows:

"If the owner of the capital gives permission to hand over mudharabah capital to the third party, then this is permissible. This was emphasized by Imam Aḥmad, and we are not aware of any khilâf (differences of opinion) in this matter. And the position of the first mudhârib is only as a representative for investors in this mudhârabah contract."

Further Ibn Qudamah al-Maqdisi:

“When the first mudhârib hands over the capital to the third party, and he does not require that he must receive profit sharing, then the mudhârabah contract is valid. However, if the first mudhârib requires you to get profit sharing, then the mudhârabah is invalid. Because he is not the owner of capital nor is he a worker. While profit can only be obtained with one of the two reasons.”

In the contemporary financial practices, in the opinion of the author, the opinion that allows mudhârib-yudhârib contracts to be superior opinion, binding in practice is carried out by Islamic financial institutions, the role of Islamic financial institutions as intermediary finance functions to collect funds from the public and distribute funds to the public.

Thus, the collection products in the form of deposits made by both bank (shariah) and non-bank-shariah institutions such as sharia cooperatives, in practice allow using mudhârib-yudhârib contracts. Therefore, the permissibility of deposits is based on an analogy (qiyyâs) to the mudhârib-yudhârib contract.

When viewed from the pillars of qiyyâs, then (1) the ushul is mudhârib-yudhârib; (2) the furu’ is deposits; (3) the ashl law is permissible as is the opinion of the Hanabilah scholars above; and (4) the illat is the permissible to repeat mudhârabah.

4. Conclusion

There are differences of opinion among scholars regarding the position of qiyyâs as a legal proposition in the determination of law, including in the field of sharia economic law. However, according to the author's opinion, the opinion that is superior and relevant is the opinion of the majority of scholars who make qiyyâs the basis for determining the law. The reason is the limited texts (nash) of the Holy Koran and hadith. Meanwhile, the contemporary issues in the field of sharia economic law, such as contemporary transactions, will continue to emerge from time to time. To be able to answer these contemporary issues in the field of sharia economic law, there is no other way except by examining the ‘illat (ratio legis) of the laws contained in the texts (nash) and on the basis of ‘illat, the law is applied to these new issues. With limited nash, while new issues, especially those related to the contemporary transactions, continue to emerge, ijtihad using qiyyâs is a must. The application of the qiyyâs method in the field of sharia economic law is applied in contemporary transaction activities, including the qiyyâs of the IMFZ contract to the bai’ al-salam contract; (2) Qiyyâs sale and lease back transactions to bai’al-istihlāl; (3) Qiyyâs wakâlah bi al-ujrah contract to ijārah contract; (4) Qiyyâs Wada’I al-Mashrafiyyah to the qardh contract; and (5) qiyyâs deposits to mudhârib-yudhârib.
